

Today I Saw A Light
By Gregory JM Kasunich

Today I saw a light

(again)

A warm flicker inside the glass globe of myself - as if reappearing, as if always there

And in wonder, I smiled

Having thought the little thing long-ago-gone, snuffed and smothered.

But! it shown soft and clear through the cracks in my soft vessel those fissures, the work of of my terminal sorrow and follies abound- working working away to free the fragile photons

Today I saw the light - not a beacon warning me from the shores of my own spirit

No -But a lithe and unrelenting reminder

Unbound

Unworried

Untouched

The only true thing worth protecting

Today I saw a light - not owned, no, but lent

Moving both ways unhurried

And cupped in my palm

For a short while
